Architecture Education

Your environment is the space outside yourself and you move in it. No one is free of the environment one inhabits. Your surroundings bind you to the world and your existence is shaped by it. An Architect has the unique privilege of making environments for others to inhabit. An architect shapes the environment with sensitivity to those who will ultimately use it and live in it. Being an architect is the ultimate responsibility and the ultimate challenge, for in a sense this 'grand designer' shapes not only space but also perhaps the destinies of users of those spaces.

Studying Architecture can open your mind to this vast subject of space and design. The architectural course is a broad base look at almost every man-made object and idea, thus in a sense covers all that we know as culture. A student studies the building sciences, its technology the art, aesthetics, the humanities and society, and learns from all these to put into practice the actual making buildings. To be an architect, you not only need a fine hand, but a keen mind sensitive to the needs of others for whom you will be designing.

Design can span smallest spoon to the largest city and the study of architecture will give you a sense of all its scales. No doubt, the concentration will be on designing buildings, but the five year course gives you a holistic insight into all forms of design and allows you to explore these in depth. In the course of five years, you will also gain insights and abilities in Interior Design, Landscape Design and Urban Design. Apart from this, you will gain an appreciation of varied subjects from Design to Building Construction, from Structure to History, from Sociology to Building Surveying and Valuation. The course will take you out of the college into the world at large, where you will visit sites and understand the actualities of the buildings, go on tours all around the country to visit our vast heritage of architecture. By graduation, you will have gained management, leadership and communication skills-a critical understanding of life.

The aim of this course is to make you a practicing Professional. After you graduate with a B.Arch. Degree, you have to get registered with Council of Architecture. You are then ready to practice, to put into effect all you have learnt for the benefit of the society at large. Architecture as a discipline is not subject to the shifting winds of trends and fashion. There is always a need for building and for shaping spaces, both interior and exterior. An architect is always needed, no matter how small or large the need of the design is.

After you graduate, the opportunities are endless. Setting up practice is the most common route for most of the architects. Some prefer to study further by joining specialized Post Graduations(M.Arch.) as Planning, Management or Research. Studying architecture prepares you for a number of disciplines by giving the necessary skills and sensitivity. Architects have become top professionals in varied fields such as graphics, product, interior, landscape or urban design, planning, conservation, construction management, computer application, education, film making and arts. In each case, knowledge and understanding of the built environment allows for a unique insight that leads to excellence. Just as we can never escape our environment, the shapers of the environment, namely architects, can never escape their destinies as the shapers of the society.
